
2021

Salary Report

Occupations and Wages for Certified Rehabilitation Counselors

Certified Rehabilitation Counselors are Experts in Disability

This occupation and wage report provides an update on the 2008 Salary Survey. This report includes an overview of the certification process, roles of Certified Rehabilitation Counselors (CRCs), educational background, and job responsibilities. The occupation and wage data analyzed in this report represents employment opportunities and salary information based on more than twenty-five practice settings.

A Unique Profession Serving Unique Clients

Rehabilitation counseling is unique among the counseling disciplines because it was legislated into existence more than one hundred years ago. The passage of the Smith-Fess Act in 1920 established the federal-state vocational rehabilitation program and helped elevate rehabilitation counseling to a profession.

All people with disabilities have the right to full lives in communities of their choosing where they can live, learn, work, and enjoy life.

Rehabilitation counselors are the only professional counselors educated and trained at the graduate-level who possess the specialized knowledge, skills, and attitudes to work collaboratively with individuals with disabilities. Those who voluntarily pursue and maintain the Certified Rehabilitation Counselor (CRC) credential join a select group. The Certified Rehabilitation Counselor credentialing process was the first counseling certification process in the U.S. and established a professional standard of excellence. Certified rehabilitation counselors earn the nationally recognized, accredited credential after successfully passing the CRC

Examination. The examination is based on regularly conducted evidence-based research focusing on roles, knowledge, competencies, and job tasks, known as the Job Task Analysis (JTA).

CRCs are the bridge between the individual and self-sufficiency, helping their clients live fully integrated lives.

Role of Certified Rehabilitation Counselors

Rehabilitation counseling is a systematic process that assists persons with physical, mental, developmental, cognitive, and emotional disabilities to achieve their personal, career, and independent living goals in the most integrated setting possible. CRCs are required to have exceptional breadth of knowledge of disabilities, which no other counseling profession requires. No other counseling profession is dedicated to working with individuals with disabilities. Further, CRCs are unique in their holistic and comprehensive approach to treating the whole person.

The CRC works to determine the service delivery process for each client/consumer. This delivery process is based on each individual's plan for services: CRCs provide continuity for the implementation of that plan. The outcome of the plan is the successful integration of the person into school, an employment setting, and/or the community. The rehabilitation counseling process is based on identifying and implementing ways to meet the individual's goals for employment and/or independent living by overcoming or managing the personal, social, and/or psychosocial effects of disabilities.

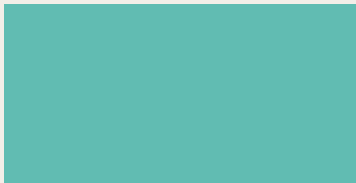

Educational Background of Certified Rehabilitation Counselors

A master's degree in rehabilitation counseling is the minimal educational background for an applicant to sit for the CRC Examination. The focus of graduate-level rehabilitation counseling education is on the functional capabilities and prognosis of individuals with disabilities. This foundation in the medical and psychosocial aspects of chronic illness and disability is further enhanced by the knowledge domains of counseling theories, techniques, and evidence-based practices; assessment/evaluation, occupational analysis, and service implementation; case management; career development and job placement; professional orientation and ethical practice; community resources and partnerships; business engagement; crisis and trauma counseling and interventions; research, methodology, and performance management; health care and disability management; and group and family counseling. Graduate-level programs include formal training in the principles of service delivery for individuals with physical, mental, developmental, cognitive, and emotional disabilities. The graduate-level education must also include an internship under the supervision of a CRC; a minimum of 240 hours of the 600-hour internship must be spent providing direct rehabilitation counseling services to individuals with disabilities.

Responsibilities

The rehabilitation counseling process involves communication, goal setting, beneficial growth or change through self-advocacy, and psychological, vocational, social, and behavioral interventions. The specific techniques and modalities utilized within this rehabilitation counseling process may include, but are not limited to the following:

- Assessment and appraisal
 - Diagnosis and treatment planning
 - Career (vocational) counseling
 - Individual and group counseling treatment interventions focused on facilitating adjustments to the medical and psychosocial impact of disability using a strength-based approach
 - Case management, referral, and service coordination
 - Adjusting the rehabilitation or treatment plan as necessary based on the maintenance of client records and monitoring of clients' progress
 - Program evaluation and research
 - Interventions to remove environmental, employment, and attitudinal barriers
 - Consultation services among multiple parties and regulatory systems
 - Job analysis, job development, and placement services, including assistance with employment and job accommodations
 - Providing consultation about and access to rehabilitation technology
 - Employing multicultural competencies when working with clients and consider a client's intersectionality across each stage of the rehabilitation counseling process
 - Promoting diversity, equity, and belonging within coworker relationships and professional settings
 - Helping employers understand the needs and abilities of people with disabilities, as well as laws and resources that affect people with disabilities
 - Advocating for the rights of people with disabilities to live in a community and work in the job of their choice
 - Promoting empowerment through self-advocacy and self-determination
 - Respecting and promoting the diversity of human experience and appreciating culture
 - Emphasizing client strengths versus deficits
 - Serving individuals holistically
 - Advocating for the fair and adequate provision of services
-

The Research: Wages for Certified Rehabilitation Counselors Working Full Time

The Commission on Rehabilitation Counselor Certification (CRCC) conducted research on active CRCs in the fall of 2021. The purpose and important component of this research was to collect accurate occupational employment and wages for certified rehabilitation counselors. CRCC hired Campbell Rinker, who specializes in marketing research for nonprofit organizations, to conduct the salary survey of CRC certificants. Fielding occurred online in December 2021, with invitations and reminders sent via email to 13,698 active CRC credential holders. A total of 4,550 certificants responded, a 33.2% response rate. This level of response provided a margin of error of $\pm 1.6\%$ at the 95% confidence level. Based on the results of the salary survey, CRCC reports estimates for a mean wage of \$73,851 for certified rehabilitation counselors working full time (32 or more hours per week). Annual wage data are based on 2019 wages; 2019 represents a full year of wages for CRCs pre-pandemic. The research was conducted in the fall of 2021. Three in four respondents saw their income change from 2019 to 2021. 62% reported an overall increase in their salary. Salaries for CRCs increase with age and experience. This correlation is consistent with other fields of employment. Employers in the Northeast provide higher wages to CRCs. For 2019 to 2021, CRCs living in the Northeast reported wages that were significantly higher than CRCs living in other regions.

Employment Opportunities

The CRC credential opens a world of professional opportunities for a certificant. CRCs report working in over 25 different practice settings. The majority typically provide direct services in state/federal agency, college or university, private practice, or for/non-profit rehabilitation center settings. The CRCs' graduate-level, specialized preparation

Consultants and Self-Employed

CRCs who are self-employed and/or consulting can also use this information when considering the how their training and specialized experience should be factored in to their business plans.

The Public

All people with disabilities have the right to full lives in communities of their choosing where they can live, learn, work, and enjoy life.
CertiSs7CWcdght to